This year's assessment was stricter than before as the criteria extended from five to nine aspects. Evonik stood out to the awards committee and was given especially high scores for its excellent performance management and leadership development, as well as its efforts and practices in corporate culture.

"It is a great honor to win this award once again. Winning the Top Employer eighth time is a perfect recognition and reflection to Evonik's commitment and continuous efforts in human resource management," said Dr. Hans-Josef Ritzert, President Evonik Greater China region at the award ceremony. "People are the most valuable asset of Evonik, therefore we will continue to help our employees give full play to their potentials and grow together with the company."

The Top Employers Institute (formerly known as the CRF Institute) is an independent organization headquartered in Holland. It has been studying the employee offerings of significant employers and recognising Top Employers around the world since 1991.
